Jenny Aguirre and her son

Jenny Aguirre is thrilled about the chance to purchase a Habitat home. “The opportunity gives us a chance to have a home that is stable for my son and me; I don't have to worry about whether the lease is going to end and where I have to go,” Jenny explains. Owning a home will allow her to create a worry-free environment for her family, without the constant uncertainty of moving.

Jenny is especially excited for her son to finally have his own space. “I am looking forward to my son having his own room and being able to set it up and decorate it for him,” she shares. She is also grateful for the accessibility of their new home, which will provide both of them with a greater sense of security.

Financially, Jenny has faced challenges, often struggling to make it through the week. Living paycheck to paycheck has made it difficult for her to save for the future or cover unexpected expenses. Owning her own home will provide much-needed financial stability, allowing her to break free from the constant pressure of rising rent and focus on paying off debts and securing a better future for her family.

“The opportunity gives us a chance to have a home that is stable for my son and me; I don't have to worry about whether the lease is going to be up and where I have to go.”

Jenny has deeply appreciated the sense of community and support throughout her homeownership journey. “Working with the volunteers and other future homeowners has been amazing. I was able to share time and share experiences and the happiness that all of us were working towards the benefit of our homes.” The shared effort has given her a sense of connection and pride, knowing that everyone is working together to create a better future.

Jenny's son, despite his disabilities, is bright and determined. “I want my child to continue going to school so he can become independent. I want my child to keep studying to keep learning despite his disabilities. He is very smart; he will be attending an Adult Day Care due to his disabilities,” Jenny shares. She sees this new home as a stable foundation for her son's continued growth and learning.
