Kemolee Hylton and Family

For Kemolee Hylton, the opportunity to own her first home means much more than just having a place to live – it represents stability, financial freedom, and a long-awaited fresh start.

“This opportunity means that I will have a stable place. No more moving for a long time,” Kemolee shares. “It will change my life because I will own my first home and also have the financial freedom I’ve been praying for.”

Currently, Kemolee lives paycheck to paycheck, renting a single bedroom for herself and her two children. Despite the challenges, she looks forward to a brighter future where she can finally pay off the credit card debt that has weighed on her and have the funds to purchase her own car. “Having my own home will allow me to do this,” she says.

“This opportunity means that I will have a stable place. No more moving for a long time.”

One of the things Kemolee and her children are most excited about is the space they will finally have. “I’m looking forward to having more space and the kids having their own rooms,” she adds. For her children, the thought of having their own rooms and a backyard to play in brings joy and excitement.

Her experience with Habitat for Humanity CFC has been incredibly positive. “Working with the volunteers was amazing,” Kemolee recalls. “I had no problem asking questions about what they were doing, and it felt good. I didn’t know I could use volunteer hours to get a house, so this experience is a blessing for me and my kids.”

With the promise of a stable home and the opportunity to build financial security, Kemolee and her family are looking forward to a new chapter full of growth, stability, and hope.
